Corrections Department implements the Atlas digital platform Platform expands access to rehabilitative programming for inmates

SANTA FE – The New Mexico Corrections Department has launched a digital behavioral health platform for all inmate tablets, significantly expanding access to rehabilitative programming.

Atlas, developed by The Change Companies, offers more than 23 curricula and a multimedia library covering job readiness, financial literacy, family reunification, substance use education, mental health awareness, parenting, anger management and trauma recovery. The platform uses an evidence-based Interactive Journaling approach paired with video and audio materials.

“This platform gives incarcerated New Mexicans real tools to prepare for life after release,” said Corrections Secretary Alisha Tafoya Lucero. “When people have access to programming on a timeline that works for them and that addresses their individual challenges, they’re more likely to succeed when they return to their communities.”

The Atlas platform has demonstrated strong outcomes in correctional and community supervision settings nationwide. In other jurisdictions, 100% of participants reported that journaling through Atlas was helpful and supported progress toward treatment goals, while 86% said it helped them better express their thoughts and feelings.

“We are proud to partner with Corrections to further its mission of fostering positive personal growth and self-development among justice-involved individuals,” said The Change Companies Co-CEO Ryan Lechner. “We look forward to seeing the impact Atlas will have on behavior and reentry preparation across New Mexico.”

Since its launch in December 2025, the department has seen strong engagement:

- 1,777 individuals self-enrolled
- 2,928 hours spent in programming

- 12,571 individual sessions completed

In a 30-day satisfaction survey, 100% of participants said they found Atlas helpful, 89% said it helped them work toward their goals, and 89% said it helped them learn more about themselves.
